Transport for NSW is writing to you because the law requires that an unrestricted driver/rider licence be suspended if its holder incurs a total of 13 or more demerit points (14 or more for professional drivers) within any three year period.

If you commit any further offences, you may lose your licence.

Increased Penalties for Repeat Traffic Offenders:

Additional penalties apply for people who have repeatedly exceeded their demerit point limit.

As an unrestricted licence holder, if you exceed the demerit point limit twice in five years, you may be required to pass the Driver Knowledge Test and/or complete a driver education course to maintain your licence. You must pay for all test and course fees.

The impact of road crashes in NSW

Each year around 300 people are killed and 17,000 are injured on NSW roads.

The top behaviour issues on our roads include:

- speeding
- driving tired
- illicit drugs and alcohol
- not wearing seatbelts
- distraction (for example, mobile phone use).

Transport for NSW partners with the NSW Police Force to target these high risk behaviours through speed enforcement and random alcohol and drug testing.

Fines collected from speed, red light and mobile phone detection cameras support the Community Road Safety Fund which is used for:

- public education campaigns
- road safety treatments (like rumble strips and flexible barriers)
- high visibility speed enforcement.
